Microscope Enhanced Dentistry

Greater visual acuity with the surgical microscope's wide range of magnification, and bright illumination allows us to pick up problems early and work at a higher level of accuracy.

Images can be captured from the microscope and shared with our patients, highlighting areas requiring treatment and enabling our patients to make informed decisions about their dental treatment. Patients can even watch the treatment undertaken with its video function!

Dental microscopes have been in use since 1953, as specialised dental equipment. In dentistry, microscopes are generally only found in specialised treatment centres. Particularly in the field of endodontics (root canal treatment), which allows the treatment to be carried out to a very high level of accuracy.

Beyond endodontics, the microscope is also used in general dentistry to further enhance the quality of our work, and conserve long term dental health for our patients.

Much of what we do requires us to visualise fine details within our patient's mouths and work with a high degree of accuracy. For this reason, you may have noticed your dentist wearing special magnifying eyeglasses called loupes, which provide a more zoomed-in, detailed view whilst working.

However, our new ZEISS Microscopic allows our dentists to see tiny details that are simply impossible to visualize with the naked eye. The use of a dental microscope gives a clear, magnified perspective. This enlarged view facilitates a more accurate diagnosis and precise treatment.
